

A supervisor and employee, and where the employee is supervised by someone else, that employee's immediate supervisor, may mutually agree to assignment of responsibilities or duties outside of those assigned in the employee's current job description as a career development training assignment. The assignment, which requires mutual agreement, is made without incurring reallocation or compensation obligations, in return for the opportunity to develop new skills and competencies.

A career development assignment requires performance of responsibilities that are outside the current job description and are assigned on a temporary, time-limited basis. These assignments might include inter-unit rotational and/or special project assignments. Participation in this educational activity does not guarantee a promotion or advancement.

Description of responsibilities and duties to be assigned: Time period assigned: (Note: the assignment can not begin prior to the "Begin Date." The assignment cannot extend beyond the End Date without mutual agreement, which should be documented on another Career Assignment Agreement)  _____ _____ Begin date End date

Employee Agreement I am entering into this career development assignment voluntarily and consistent with the terms of this agreement, CCS Administrative Procedure 2.00.01B, WAC 357-34-050, and my respective collective bargaining agreement. I understand that I have a right to reject the terms of this agreement and remain assigned to my current duties and suffer no negative repercussions for having done so. I understand that I am waiving reallocation and compensation rights in return for the opportunity to use this assignment for personal and professional development for the time period identified above.
